Dramatic Rescue Follows Crash

PLUCKED FROM MOUNTAINSIDE, injured Arnold Anderson is winched aboard hovering RCAF helicopter after 40 agonizing hours beside crashed aircraft. Anderson, a provincial government clerk, received shoulder burns and broken arm. Rescue was made early this morning. Earlier, an air force doctor had been dropped to crash scene. Anderson was hauled into aircraft in a basket stretcher which was tipped vertically to manoeuvre through hatch. (RCAF photo)

Ottawa to Back Provinces On Comprehensive Medicare

THREE PREMIERS WANT A VOLUNTARY SCHEME

OTTAWA-Premier Bennett and Alberta's Premier E. C. Manning both said on arriving here Sunday night that any national medical care insurance scheme should be a voluntary one.

Premier Duff Roblin of Manitoba also took this stand. Liberal MP Walter Foy said Friday that the federal vernment is working on a compulsory medicar that will cost the average taxpayer $190 per year. But Prime Minister Pearson said today that a federal medicare scheme would be delayed until provinces had developed plans with citizen regardless of his finances is one that is increasingly favored in our welfare society. It has been partially approached by British Columbia, initiated by Saskatchewan, and is being given consideration by Ontario and other provinces. Under such circumstances it is logical to try to present a nationwide plan which would provide uniform care for all Canadians.

Three important points, however, must be clarified before any plan can succeed. There is the matter of the extent of care for the individual and how he will make use of the services. There is the matter of the relationship of doctors to the plan and how they will be paid. There is the matter of who will pay and how it will be done.

The extent of care varies with a number of existing medical insurance plans. Some omit certain illnesses or limit the period of treatment. Some except chronic complaints or impose age restrictions. The extent of service determines the rate of payment. The freedom of use made by patients is an important feature and can result in such problems as those which have plagued the British medicare

A too easy access to doctors for trivial needs can quickly swamp the facilities and bog the medical profession down in needless tasks to the detriment of its services to the lost in the huge grab-bag of genpublic. Jammed waiting rooms, cur- eral revenue.

THE IDEA OF MEDICAL CARE sory examinations, overworked phyuniversally available to every sicians—these can result from the rush of the public to get in on "free" medical care. Imposition of a small initial fee-on the same principle as the one-dollar-a-night hospital charge-would help to restrict the tide of patients to those really needing a doctor's help where the direct impact of a premium does not do this.

A successful plan must of course have the doctors' support. Trained medical men cannot be dragooned into service, nor should they be regimented as to hours, rates or patients' roster. Disregard of such elementary considerations must lead inevitably to a decline in standards of service and also in the numbers of men willing to enter the profession.

The question of how payment is to be made determines whether the system is really insurance or state welfare. Plans properly worked out on such a basis as that of MSA, for instance, ensure that the premium rates will cover the cost of services. government-sponsored compulsory plan will have provision for those who cannot pay premiums, but it is important that there should be no belief by the public that "the government" pays for its medical care. It can only be paid for through premiums or taxes, and the specific size and nature of the contributions should be made obvious so that the plan is not

An Important Decision

IN HIS EFFORTS TO GET THE long-discussed regional district plan under way, Municipal Affairs Minister Campbell appears to have forced a squeeze on the city and municipal councils.

He has given the councils 60 days in which to sound public opinion in a referendum if they wish to do so. But the councils themselves may make the decision to join or not to join the regional district organization. Or if no decision of any kind is recorded, the municipality, under the legislation, will automatically become a member of their regional group.

The catch is that some reeves feel that 60 days is too short a time in which to prepare the public for a referendum and to hold the vote. And they believe, and rightly so, that adherence to the far-reaching provisions of the regional set-up is a matter that calls for a decision by the public.

Municipalities may join the plan completely or in part-that is, they may decide to belong to the regional board in respect of one or more of the joint undertakings to come within the work of the region. These planning, water supply and such joint matters. Mr. Campbell's latest directive, therefore, seems to force the prospective members either to hold a hurried and perhaps unsatisfactory public vote, or to join in respect of one or two simple categories-for instance, purchase of future park sites-and leave until later a decision on whether or not to extend their membership to the more complicated aspects.

The principle of the joint regional district has been widely approved. It would provide the machinery for planning and administering many matters which involve two or more of the municipalities and other areas engaged in the plan. But since the system also entails far-reaching decisions, the respective councils should know that the public is behind them in deciding to

This is too valuable and important a scheme to be allowed to r in preliminary problems of creation. It is right that Mr. Campbell should press for implementation, otherwise talk could go on indefinitely. But he should not force the issue to the point of squeezing potential members out or neglecting include hospitals, parks, sewers, the necessary democratic processes.

Pumping Up the Bubble

the Liberal party in Ottawa made a daring prophesy. He said (privately course) that within six months rising prices would become the dominant issue of Canadian politics, the government's worst problem. His timing was wrong. Prices did not rise as fast as he had expected. But the latest figures suggest that his general con-When the cost of living index rose by a full point in the single month of June no government in its senses could ignore the return of an old enemy. Inflation

Naturally, this phenomenon, as old as civilization, was plunged without delay into current political debate. Mr. T. C. Douglas demanded that the government do something about it. He seemed to forget that the government already had done something about it, with his en-thusiastic assistance. The government's policies, here and in most countries guarantee inflation and no one supported ose policies more ardently than Mr.

Higher Prices Inevitable

The whole apparatus of state spending, deficit finance and recent tax reduc-tions, the theory of pumping up the economy with artificial respiration, the attempt by Canadians to live beyond their means on money borrowed from foreigners may have been wise and ne essary. But it was bound to raise prices and, in raising them, to make minee-meat of all the government's comfortable

Presumably the Economic Council of Canada is the most interested observer of the price index. For the council, in devising its hopeful five-year plan of economic growth, had assumed that prices would rise by about 2 per cent a year and now this mark has been passed in the first six months of 1965. If the June rate continues the council must re-turn to its drawing boards and draft a new plan.

Fine in Vacuum

The trouble with all these plans is What the economists fail to understand, being honest men, is that the politicians don't really care about prices and never worry about inflation until the cost of living begins to lose them votes. Then they rush in with whoops of protest, as Mr. Douglas is rushing now, to deplore the conditions that they themselves have created.

All government policy at Ottawa, Washington and other world capitals is based on continuing inflation but the deliberate plan to keep prices rising and systematically debase all savings is never admitted in public.

From the head of every state we shall soon be hearing solemn promises that the price rise must be halted, that the little saver with his government bond and the little saver with his government. bond and life insurance policy can safely trust the state managers. No doubt Mr. Gordon's speeches are written already, in highly moral tones. Mr. Douglas has anticipated him and found a convenient whipping boy to replace American im-perialism in Southeast Asia.

The state has been promising to pre-rve the value of money since the days of the Egyptian Pharaohs and has never ceased to defraud the saver by its methods of legal counterfeiting for which the ordinary citizen would be jailed. In modern times the old swindle has been refined and dressed up to look like a shattering new discovery. We are told that a regular annual inflation of modest size is needed to promote economic expansion. Perhaps it is, but the politicians are deceiving us all the same because they cannot control the rate of inflation under any social system, once the combustibles are lighted.

Same in Russia

The perfectly planned Russian state, for example, is no better in this respect than the so-called chaotic capitalism of North America. A foreign traveller re-cently found an aged woman who grows radishes in her back yard selling them at the factory gates of Moscow for 55 cents a bunch. That woman's radishes present a tiny microcosm of a worldwide process known as the law of supply and demand. Inflation is a universal human disease flourishing wherever the climate

Canada And Latin America

TODAY, the continent of South America seems to be filled with persons eager to convince, plan, advise, investigate.
The old saw about Latin America being a neglected area is surely outdated when one considers the number of aid agency men, representatives of missionary groups, institutions, universities and development banks trying to find a way around South America's massive prob-

A vast majority of these workers seem to be from the United States, which is heavily committed both economically and politically on the continent. There is evipolitically on the continent. There is evidence that their sheer weight of numbers tends to make South Americans wonder whether they will ever be free of economic colonialism or the blandishments of U.S. planners who see the area as a potential extension of their own back yards. Communist agents are busily preaching yet another course of action, but as a Venezuelan writer has put it: "The answer to the South American future lies somewhere in between."

There are many prospersus nations

There are many prosperous nations in the world whose ambitions lie some-where between those of the United States and the Communist countries, but to most of them Latin America is too re-mote, too expensive, too easily shucked off as a U.S. responsibility or merely too unrelated a problem. At a time when the area is evolving in an atmosphere of explosive confusion, sympathetically neutral help and influence would seem to be one of the best forms of aid the Latin republics could receive.

OAS Membership

South American leaders believe that Canada could exert some of this in-fluence by joining the Organization of American States but, of course, just as much influence—and possibly more—can be exerted by a Canada independent of formal OAS ties.

This does not mean that Canada should not take a hard look at the role it has played in Latin America. The bulk of Canada's foreign aid budget is spent in India, Pakistan, Southeast Asia and Africa; it was only last year that Ottawa decided to lend $10 millions to South America. More than 400 Canadian Roman Catholic missionaries are working in Peru but each of the republics needs engineers, technical experts, civil servants, doctors and economists. HEENEY-MERCHANT REPORT

Think of the Other Party

THE Heeney - Merchant report on Canadian-American relations reduces in essence to this thesis: That in view of the special impact an unusually large range of actions by one country can have on the other, both countries should study the impact of proposed measures the other before acting on them. This obvious, but when the obvious becomes taken for Purser granted it tends to be overlooked. Most American officials concerned with Canadian-American relations welcome its restatement over the signature of two such respected friends and experts as Livingston Merchant and A. D. Heeney, respective former U.S. Canadian ambassadors to each other's the obvious are cited here. One was the U.S. interest equalization tax on loans proposed to improve American balance of payments position The special impact of this on Canadian financial markets went beyond anything American officials had calculated. On the Canadian side was the even more recent notion to apply the end of tax exemptions for advertising in Canadian editions of foreign periodicals to the two such magazines already established in Canada. Time and Reader's Digest. A little quiet prior consuitation might have eliminated the need for a later public Canadian back-down under unpleasant U.S. pressure.

Fundamental Beliefs

The move, it is said here, was one striking at two fundamental beliefs of American foreign policy: That foreignowned property should be subject to the same laws as apply to native-owned property in the host country, and that foreign firms which have been accepted in good faith and allowed to set up shop should not be subject to later pe tion without just compensation. Without these assumptions, it is said, there can commercial life.

In this particular case, Canada's lowering the boom on Time and Reader's Digest would also set a special precedent threatening those magazines' operations in other, more sensitive countries.

The Merchant-Heeney report says: "The absence of prior consultation or the fact that such consultation as did take place was regarded as insufficient, has been a feature of many cases where an impasse has occurred and no acceptable compromise has been

A vast array of legislative proposals executive edicts flows down the endless conveyor belt of modern bureaucracy. Much of the task is to identify and pick out for attention those items which may affect Canadian-American relations, so that consultations may begin relations, so that consultations may begin as early as possible. Then, even if prob-lems are not solved, in the light of conflicting national interests, each side will at least know that its position has been seriously examined.

By RICHARD PURSER

The report has been referred to officials of both countries, who will determine what machinery can be ensure early recognition and discussion of impending problems between them. This action recognizes the depth and complexity of the two countries' interrelationships. We are so intertwined that an American official, without thinking of Canada, may propose an action which would turn out to have a devastating effect on Canada if not intercepted by officials more knowledgeable about Canadian affairs.

Similarly, despite Canada's much less powerful position, Canadian actions can have a devastating effect on the United States — and particularly on the conduct of American foreign policy. The world United States. That is why there is more to Canadian declarations to Canadian declarations on foreign affairs than mere exercise of the free right of opinion.

Issue of Criticism

This leads to a passage in the report which attracted special attention in the press of both countries when it was released: "It is important and reason-able that Canadian authorities should have careful regard for the United States government's position in this world concanadian interests or obligations, avoid, so far as possible, public disagreement especially on critical issues."

This is not a U.S. warning to Canada to shut up. Its relevance is accepted as much by Mr. Heeney as by Mr. Merchant. It simply recognizes the delicate position of the United States as top power of the free world, and the consequent danger of boat-rocking. It says that divergent views should be expressed and resolved in private, if possible.

It does not suggest that Canada should stifle its views if, after all possible private discussion, Canada remains convinced it has a better alternative to some American policy to offer world

Virtues of Consultation

An example of the virtues of private Minister Pearson's Philadelphia speech last March. Without advance consultation, he proposed a pause in American bombing of North Viet Nam.

What effect did the speech have on the idea of a pause? "It didn't do it any good," said one top official. The explanation was that the idea was already under advanced study, but that Mr. Pearson threw its timing into confusion. The United States did not want to act under apparent allied pressure, giving the enemy an impression of weakness in

That, at any rate, is the American story. If Canadians complain at times that privately expressed views are often dismissed with insufficient consideration, then that is one of the problems it is hoped implementation of the Merchant-Heeney report will solve.

But another conception of the president, of "Lyndon the headstrong," is gaining currency in American intellectual circles and abroad. This buzz of criticism seems

BETWEEN OURSELVES

By Elizabeth Forbes

Pictures of Mars from space-roving Mari-"the troubles" in Ottawa and the war in Viet Nam, all overshadowed the news that Hon. Irene Parlby of Alix, Alberta, died last week at the age of 97.

She had outlived most of her contemporaries. Her name didn't stir many memories. Yet, there is not a woman in Canada, young or old, who does not owe her at great

You see, Mrs. Parlby was one of five de-termined women who, in the early years of this century, fought to have the members of our sex declared "persons." Today, it's almost inconceivable that only 50 years ago we were not considered to be "persons," according to the meaning of that ord in the British North America Act. Yet that was the case. When it became evident that this meaning restricted us from participating in certain fields of public life, the fight commenced.

It started after Canadian women received the vote in federal elections and were eligible for the House of Commons. At that time the Federated Women's Institutes sent in a resolution asking for the appointment of women to the Senate. Reply was that women were not "persons' within the meaning of the BNA Act and therefore could not sit in the Senate.

Jmmediately Edmonton's Judge Emily Murphy (Janey Canuck) and four other Alberta women organized to bring the matter Irene Parlby, who had been swept into office with the United Farmers' movement in 1921 and was by then Alberta's first woman eabinet minister, was one of the group. The others were Henrietta Muir Edwards, Nellie L. McClung and Louise C. McKinney.

It was in 1928 that the group submitted this question to the Supreme Court of Canada:

B.C. Tel communication systems help guard our continent against surprise attacks

To detect the approach of and defend against missiles, rockets or planes entering the territorial atmosphere of North America is the role of NORAD-North American Air Defence Command—with its Combat Operations Centre at Colorado Springs. Jointly controlled by the United States and Canada for defence against surprise nuclear attack, this complex nerve centre demonstrates vividly how B.C. Tel and a continent-wide network of telecommunications systems is meeting the challenge of today's "Cold War" conditions.

B.C. Tel's variety of the very latest developments in the communications systems are playing a key role in perhaps the most important of all public services defence of North America against destruction. These electronic marvels provide the connecting links for data transmission devices between radar sites and strategically located computer centres.

Such dramatic advances for military purposes are even now expanding our everyday communications. Long distance calling, radio-telephone coverage, TWX and other special data services are but a few.

Masses Pushy . . . Individuals Polite

(Last of a series)

I knew it was time to leave Japan when all the Occidentals began to look alike.

But it was with genuine regret that we boarded our craft to ride the jet stream homeward which, paradoxi-cally, lay to the east. I fel sorry for the two elderly Japladies, clad in traditional tional kimono, who came aboard because I knew how they would feel in the strange country where kimonos were thought only of nightgowns.

'Chasing Sun'

My wife wept as we soared away and I thought back a short month to the evening when our speeding airliner, after nine hours of chasing the harshly glaring sun, gave up and slanted down through pinkish-clouds so we could see the spindrift streak the fablue wrinkles of the ocean again. As we glided toward the softening light of sunset, mauve mountains materialized slowly out of the flushed horizon, their hazy peaks emerging from a fleecy base of mists and holding our fascinated gaze until, sudden-ly looking down, a broad, sandy shoreline froth-edged with breaking rollers swept beneath our wings.

We were floating down to a mosaic of green, brown and yellow patches delineated by a twisting, coiling maze of earthern dikes, glinted through with blue and silver wherever the water-filled rice paddies reflected the sky's-

In the motion poetry of an airliner landing, we descended into what looked, from the air, for all the world like a panorama of beautiful stained glass. Such was my introduction

Japan and its magic tinged all the following days. Summing up a visit to Japan is difficult, there are so many and disparate impressions.

Cities Nervous

Probably the most startling impression was created cities where, despite the masses of yellow, slant-eyed faces, the Japanese do not seem to be Oriental at all. The cities are nervous with all the downtown construction, shopping crowds, traffic jams, neon signs, noise, crush and dirt of any large North American centre. The predominant dress is suits for men, blouse and skirt for women with a sprinkling of kimonos and clogs adding more of a local fashion note than the cohesiveness of a national costume.

English is a second language and many American products from Coca Cola to Camel

The city dwellers also are marked by the neurosis of modern urban living: polite and friendly as individuals, rude and pushy in the mass. The first day, I watched an elderly gentleman bow politely across a wide lobby to an acquaintance, then turn and rudely shoulder saide several persons as he entered a hotel elevator. And, although my beard brought me some measure of respect even in the crowds, I quickly learned to be wary of the tiny, old Japaese ladies who blithely el-owed their way through any

they form a rapidly increasing majority as a result of the same flight to the city common to all industrial nations— are very similiar to North ricans in temperament character. They are gregarious, lonely, restless, pragmatic, materialistic and ambitious—driven by desires to get ahead and acquire more wordly goods.

Everywhere, men as well women, gossip with as women, gossip with acquaintances as often as they can and many times I saw young and old alike, when alone, singing rather mournfully to themselves as they walked down a street com-pletely oblivious to the crowds of strangers.

Life in the country, the little I saw of it, seemed more relaxed and, predictably, tra-ditional. More persons wore kimonos and the evening air of the villages rang with the clipclop of wooden clogs on the cobbles, much morse musical than the rumble of heavy traffic. The butterfly roofs of pagodas looked more natural

Strange Dishes

A short stay in a riyokan (Japanese inn) provided a delightful interlude where we had to doff shoes at the threshold and wear slippers, yukata (cotton summer kimono) and sleep in futons (thick, quilted pads and covers) on the floor into which we slid red as lobsters after soaking in a neck-deep Japanese bath filled with water hot enough to make tea. A charming maid served us strange dishes in our room

> The one feature this variety of landscapes has in common is the endless power line and its necklace of high tension transmission pylons. North, south, east and west, over flat, rolling and almost vertical countryside—more prevalent even than the ubiquitous rice paddies — marched this trade-mark of industrialization.

Statistics

Two identical statistics, 99.5 per cent-measuring the liter-acy and the electrification rates-sticks in my mind and, perhaps, exemplify modern Japan better than all the other statistics and descriptions put together. The poorest household in the most remote moun-tain village has the conveniences brought by the power line—something I meditate on as I sweat while manhandling heavy gasoline cans to fuel the small generator that serves my not-inexpensive if humble abode in the "dynamic society" of B.C.

But Japan, which has grown the skeleton framework of an industrial society in the stop-and go spurts of an adolescent, still has to flesh the bones. Miles and miles of crowded housing, with dirt lanes, no fire hydrants or sewers, small and grim school/courtyards teem with playing children provide a recurring contrast in all the cities, even Tokyo, to the new apartment blocks and high-rise office buildings under

Family Factories

Even the efficient, up-to-date industrial plants are surrounded by small sheds in which family-staffed factories manufacture small parts and acces-sories with primitive ma-

Although there is virtually no one out of work, there are large numbers of persons employed uselessly, sweeping a tiny corner of a plant all day long, operating the latest auto-matic self-serve elevators, outnumbering customers in many large retail stores and restaurants. Department stores even hire girls to stand at the entrance of each escalator just to wipe the moving handrail— in case someone had sweaty palms - and welcome you

This helps achieve full em-ployment but it has to be borne in mind when examining the figures that not all are gainfully employed.

However, both businessmer and government officials told me they were sure that the would straighten itself out as the growing de-mand for more labor exerted its influence and they seemed optimistic that increasing use of automation would not force even more people into make-work jobs.

Probably the only glaring weakness of Japan's industrial complex itself is the lack of a sufficiently large and capable service industry. More than once I spoke to both Japanese and Canadians who told me of their exasperation when trying to have something repaired. In all cases that I heard of, they wound up by buying a new replacement be-cause it was easier than finding a competent repairman.

As a British Columbian, I was most interested by a visit to an Ainu village in the northern island where I found strik-ing similarities with our In-dians. The Ainu have high cheek bones, high bridge to their noses, sometimes blue eyes, no slant eyes and a duskier skin. They live—or rather used to live, because this village now was a tourist attraction only—in log and shake cabins, carve 15 and 20foot totem poles with bear and stylized salmon figures but more often the human visage

As a Canadian, I was sur-prised and interested to find we have a separate identity in the Japanese mind and are not lumped in with either Am-ericans or Englishmen. The English-language newspapers never failed to carry at least at least one news item from Canada each day and there were several articles printed for a fairly sophisticated au dience of Canadiana — which would not have been justified alone for the 2,000-odd Canadians in Japan.

But most of all, Japan in-terested me as an Occidental.

is east and west is west' seemed to me outdated, and not only by the fact that we flew west to get to the east" and east to return to the west."

It is not Japan but the Japanese people themselves which appear to be a meeting place for east and west. Without losing their unique identity they have absorbed not only industrialization but also the psychology that goes with it-enough to keep a westerner infortable in a familiar atmosphere even though in strange environment. I had the feeling, and was told, that

FRANCE REJECTS U.S. PLAN FOR MONEY TALK

PARIS (AP)—France today rejected for the present ar American suggestion that a world conference be held to improve the international monetary system.

Finance Minister Valeery Giscard d'Estaing said in a press statement the U.S. suggestion does not appear "opportune" to the French government.

He added that two conditions must be fulfilled bet such a conference is called: The present system should be improved first and some preliminary agreements should be made on the nature and objectives of the reforms.

Treasury Secretary Henry H. Fowler made the proposal for a world monetary conference in a speech July 10. He said the proposal was authorized by President Johnson.

Fowler is expected to visit Western Europe in September to seek agreement on an international monetary conference.

Premiers Plan Prairie Body

OTTAWA (CP)—The federal-provincial conference of pre-miers made strides forward in social security and economic development plans today even before it formally met for the first time.

The three prairie premiers agreed tentatively to set up a regional economic council. This is expected to be patterned after the Canadian and Atlantie provinces economic coun cils which already have been hailed as successful in the field of economic planning.

Ontario raised its powerful voice in favor of larger federal grants to universities, a key object of the Maritime premiers in coming here.

Premier Lesage reiterated that Quebec wants to go it alone in fields in which it has constitutional jurisdiction, using increased tax revenues to raise the money directly within the province rather than accept grants from Ottawa.

These announcements came from pre-conference meetings and from the texts of speeches which Prime Minister Pearson and some of the premiers intend to deliver later in the day. Many of the texts were made available for publication at noon, 21/2 hours before Mr. Pearson was to convene the conference formally.

TAKE POSITIONS

Briefly, their positions were

-Premier Smallwood of New-foundland: There should be no federal taxes on privatelyowned power utilities, just as publicly-owned power utilities now are tax exempt.

-Premier Stanfield of Nova Scotia: Federal aid to university education should be in-creased and based on a formula geared to the number of university students in a province, rather than provincial population.

Edward Island: Echoing the views of the other Atlantic premiers, he declared that mineral deposits under the seas off provincial shores should definitely fall within provincial jurisdiction.

-Premier Robichaud of New Brunswick: Declined to go into detail but said he would submit a brief touching on medicare, federal aid to edu-cation, and taxes on pri-vately-owned power utilities.

—Premier Lesage of Quebec:
Willing to listen to any federal proposal for comprehen-sive medical care insurance but Quebec/has already been working several months in preparing its own plan, and Quebec will not condone federal intervention in any provincial field of jursidiction.

ROBARTS DISSATISFIED -Premier Robarts of Ontario: He is known to be dis-satisfied with federal incensatisfied with retieral meeting tives to industrial development which might be used to benefit one part of a province in a discriminatory way against another part of the same province.

toba: The federal government should recognize that differ-ent provinces have different scales of priority, and high on the Manitoba list are aid to education and economic

-Premier Thatcher of Sas katchewan: Incentives for industry, roads to resources, and other development projects should be expanded before the country embarks on any huge new welfare program, and there should be no discouragement of U.S. capital investment in Canada. -Premier Manning of Al-berta: While supporting a care program in principle, he

A new Town for our Province

The latest chapter in the exciting British Columbia Story

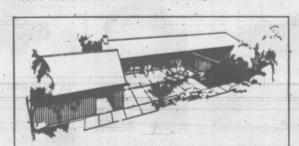

Why settle for a logging camp in the virgin forest?

In this modern day and age it didn't make sense to the Tahsis Company Ltd. So, when planning their new $60 million kraft pulp mill on the west coast of Vancouver Island, they decided to add a complete new town to the map of British Columbia as well. It's already taking shape.

GOLD RIVER will be just about as unlike a logging camp as you can get. It will be a model, up-to-the-minute community of attractive, privately-owned family homes, garden apartments, stores, elementary and senior secondary schools, playing fields, swimming pool and the many other amenities of modern living, including cable television. It will be a place where families can settle and enjoy the good life to the full . . . where children can grow up with all the educational and recreational advantages of urban living anywhere.

Located in the historic cradle of B.C., close to the shores of Nootka Sound where the Indian Chief Maquinna rose to fame and Captain Cook first landed in 1778, GOLD RIVER will be an "open" town with its own municipal self-government. By June 1967 its population will number nearly 3,000 and sufficient land is available for expansion. It will be linked to Campbell River and the Island Highway by a 50-mile public road. Regular

Family homes will be privately owned scheduled air flights already connect it with Vancouver, little more than an hour's flying time away.

GOLD RIVER will be the home of many loggers working in nearby operations and of employees at the new Tahsis Company mill a few miles distant from the townsite. The mill itself, also due to be in operation by mid-1967, will be one of the most modern in the world. With a daily capacity of 750 tons of bleached kraft pulp, it will provide permanent jobs for 600 people in the mill and the woods.

GOLD RIVER represents the latest chapter in the exciting British Columbia story, It will become a focal point for the opening up of the whole northwestern area of Vancouver Island . . . a fine place to work, a fine place to live.

JUBILANT JANA JUMPS TO TOP OF THE CLASS

VANCOUVER (CP) — A Washington State man and a Vancouver girl shared wins in six of 31 final events at the Western Canada Open Track and Field Championships here during the weekend.

Leading the women's events was Jana Lundy of Van-couver with triple victories in the long jump (18' 2%''), the high jump (5' 2") and the 80-metre hurdles (12.0). Dave Williams of Tacoma, Wash, showed the stuff athletes are made of and emerged winner in three of the five events he entered. He won the long jump (22'8%''), the 120-yard high hurdles (14.7% and the triple jump (46'5½''). In addition he finished second in the 440-yard hurdles and fourth in the

Another American upset was scored by Marilyn White of Los Angeles who beat Canada's fastest woman, Irene Piotrow-ski of Vancouver, in both the 100-yard and 220-yard races. Only one Canadian record was cracked at the meet. That was the Canadian ojen javelin record of American J. Fromm. John Burns of Portland, Ore., was the record breaker, throwing his javelin 250'8", one inch better than Fromm's record.

Harry Jerome of Vancouver, a Canadian Olympic bronze medalist, was up to his usual form and easily won the 100-yard and 220-yard events. He equalled his Canadian mark of 20.9 in the 220-yard rape but was 6-10 of a second off his Canadian record in the 100-yards with a time of 9.8.

NOTICE TO PARENTS OF SCHOOL CHILDREN

UNIVERSAL TUTORING COLLEGE, now in its third year, once again is planning special remedial tutoring sessions to run through summer months. We have found this to be an excellent time to review and uncover basic faults and weaknesses in a student's work, for without day to day pressure of school, he is able to concentrate more fully on his problems.

Obviously, to do well in his next year at school, he must understand his previous year's work. Then again, by spending a little time each week at his books he is not apt to forget what he has learned this past year.

Daily classes are not required, but just a couple of hours twice weekly will suffice. This will not intrude too much on his holiday activities.

If your child has encountered difficulties this past year, plan now to give him this valuable help.

BETWEEN MAN AND LOG

William D. Malley, of Yubacity, Calif., was sitting on a newly-chopped tree in Stanislaus National Forest east of here Saturday when it started to roll.

Witnesses said Malley was thrown off in front of the log and he began running. He tried to outrace it but it overtook him and crushed him to death.

A companion who had been sitting with Malley was thrown backward when the tree began to roll and escaped

In science fiction stories future citizen civilizations frequently make use of mysterious communicators for talk-ing to friends or business associates. They press a button and an image, pree-dimensional and in full color, floats in front of them. There is something like this already eing carried out in our 20th century laboratories. In principle, a TV set could now be built whose screen would appear, not like a flat glass square, Stephen but as a window through which a fully three-dimensional Stephen picture would be seen.

Viewers would need no special glasses or viewing devices, and the 3-D would be so solid that viewers could, by shifting their seats, peer around the image of an actor in the foreground and see what is behind

It sounds improbable but the fundamental technique exists and has been demonstrated. * *

The basic idea was conceived some years ago by Professor Dennis Gabor, a physicist at Imperial College, London, and is now being explored in laboratories in various parts of the world. One centre is the Univer-

Now that man has photographed Mars from a rela-tively close range nothing else can be really surprising. nicks are carrying out experiments. nicks are carrying out experiments

According to the journal, Scientific American, the occdure is this: A scene or object to be recorded is illuminated by a beam from a laser, and the reflected light directed onto a photographic plate. But part of the same beam is shone directly at the plate, without ng reflected by the object.

The direct light and the reflected light then interfere, rather as the spreading ripples from two stones dropped into a still pond meet and produce a complex pattern on the surface. The result of the interference is that the photographic plate records a pattern called a "hologram." This hologram image has many odd properties which allow it, among other things, to pro-

There are many scientific applications to explore, notably the possibility of extremely high magnification 3-D microscopy.

One team of scientists at an American firm, Technical Operations Inc., has used the technique to photograph moving fog particles, making them easy to count in three dimensions

The possibility of absolutely real 3-D images is now stimulating intensive work on wider applications. We may yet in our lifetime press a button and see a friend appear, floating, apparently solidly, in front of our eyes.

Friday morning, if you re-call, was a little cloudy and the crystal ball misty so I had to turn to other sources for an answer normally snapped off with crisp decision

Those of you who, like our copy boy, have viewed your inits with alarm in recent weeks, hear this:

Some federal economists feel that the continuing fall in prices on the market is quite under-standable. They say that stocks have been over-priced for years in terms of the earnings ratio.

To back their argument they quote 124 key Toronto stocks which, at the mid-May peak, sold at 19.52 times their average per-share earnings. Other economists, also in the top flight so far as Canada is concerned, say the steady de cline is being created by invest-ors who feel that the economy of the nation will falter considerably six months from now. They want out before the big shake-up comes.

The only trouble with the lat-

Finance Minister Valeery Glocard d'Estaing said in a press statement the U.S. suggestion does not appear "opportune" to the French government.

He added that two conditions must be fulfilled before such a conference is called: The present system should be improved first and some preliminary agreements should be made on the nature and objectives of the reforms.

U.S. Treasury Secretary Henry H. Fowler made the oposal for a world monetary conference in a speech July 10.

Fowler is expected to visit Western Europe in September to seek agreement on an international monetary conference.

FRANCE REJECTS U.S. PLAN FOR MONEY TALK

PARIS (AP)—France today rejected for the present an American suggestion that a world conference be held to improve the international monetary system.

Finance Minister Valeery Giscard d'Estaing said in a press statement the U.S. suggestion does not appear "opportune" to the French government.

He added that two conditions must be fulfilled before such a conference is called: The present system should be improved first and some preliminary agreements should be made on the nature and objectives of the reforms.

U.S. Treasury Secretary Henry H. Fowler made the proposal for a world monetary conference in a speech July 10. He said the proposal was authorized by President Johnson.

Fowler is expected to visit Western Europe in September to seek agreement on an international monetary conference.
